

ABSTRACT OF DISCLOSURE

A store information processor, method, and system for purchasing items, such as expendable products and supplies, which are purchased periodically, before a customer has completely used the current stock of such items. The purchase frequency of classes of items designated by the customer is calculated using a purchase record of the customer, and the estimated next purchase date is provided to the customer. The customer may place advance orders of items to be purchased.